

Using Research Findings for Advocacy

Amanda Reichard
Audrey Schremmer-Philip

Friday, July 15, 2011

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Acknowledgement

I extend a heartfelt thanks to Martha Hodgesmith, Val Renault, Cat Howland, Jamie Simpson, and Drew Rosdahl for their important contributions to bring this presentation to fruition.

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Outline

Context

Research Results

Implications for Advocacy

Discussion

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Context

- Medicaid provides safety net for people with disabilities who cannot afford health insurance
- Health care expenditures and use for this population poorly understood
- Legislators and policy makers typically focus only on LTC expenditures (HCBS, nursing homes) while ignoring associated health care expenses
- As a result, they lose chance to address opportunities for policy change on prevention and health promotion

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

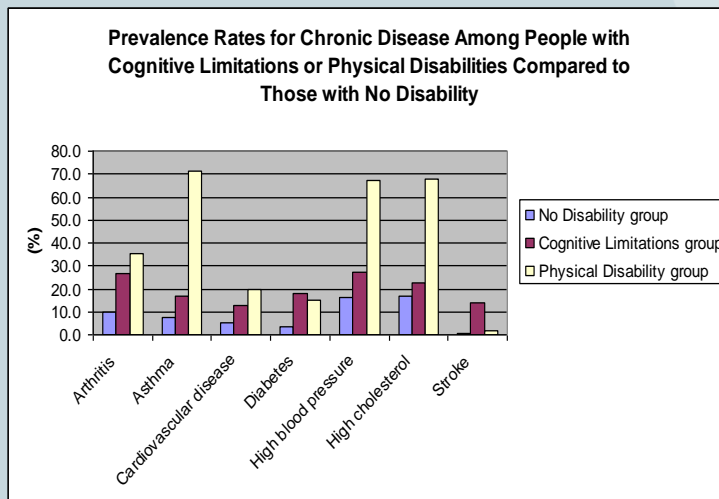

Context

- To advocate effectively, we must bring concerns to those who can effect change
- Our research provides info that consumers and those who support them can use to advocate for themselves and for broader policy change in health care

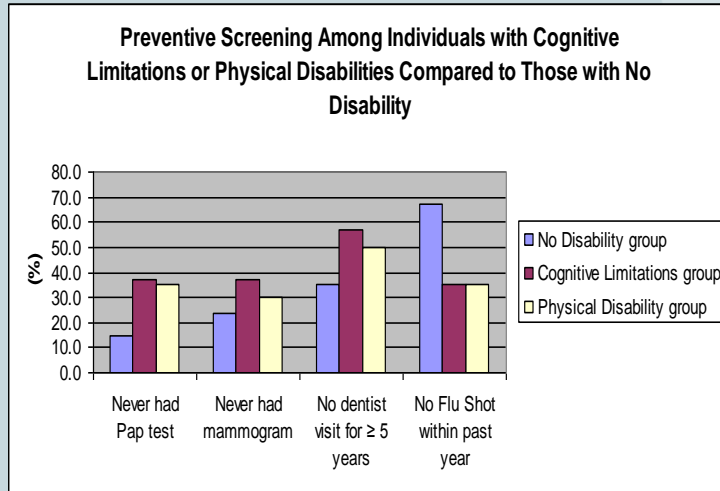

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Research Results

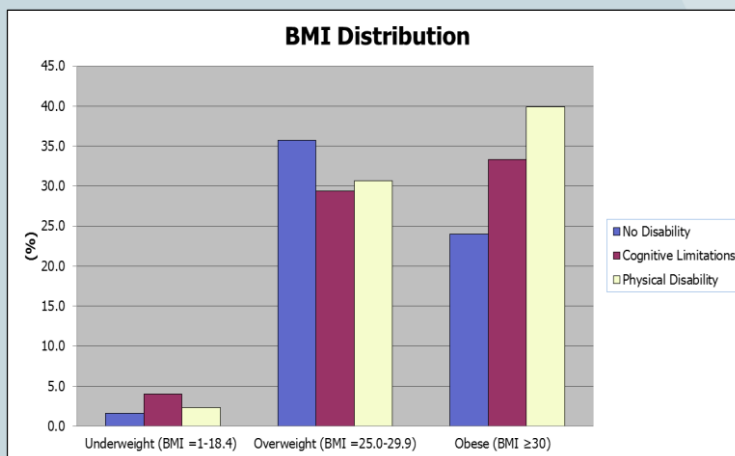

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Research Results

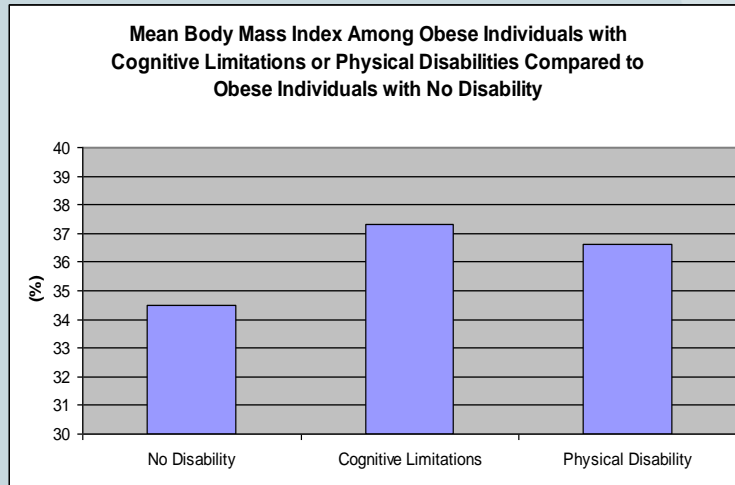

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Research Results

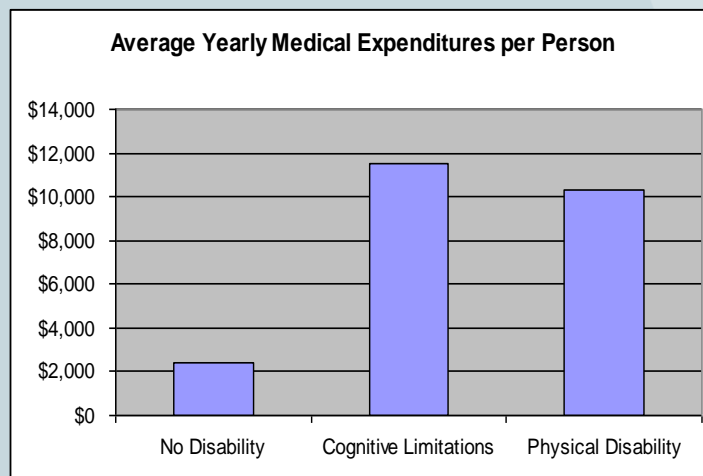

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Research Results

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Research Results

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Implications for Advocacy

To view this video, go to <http://www.youtube.com/RTCIL>

Audrey Schremmer-Philip

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living

Discussion

Does this research validate your personal experiences with people with disabilities?

How would you prioritize related advocacy efforts?

How can we further integrate the IL philosophy into health care services?

What research needs do you as IL staff or consumers currently have?

Research and Training Center on Measurement and Interdependence in Community Living